

New Management Team

We'd like to advise clients and contacts that Paul Huxtable has recently retired from Proen. Many thanks to Paul for his years of dedication to the business. Paul's management role will now be shared by Proen's Directors (Rick Morgans & George Campbell) and senior employees (Andi Stevens & Ian Pendergrast). We're confident that the new management structure will provide a platform for ongoing business improvement - further details will be provided on our website soon. Paul remains available through Proen for any projects that may require his valuable input.

Agricultural Organics

Proen Design was approached by Agricultural Organics to produce a series of photo-realistic images for marketing purposes. Images were required for a number of labelling variations within the Bloom product range.

Each packaging variation was set up in a 3D scene and rendered using 3D Studio Max to create hi-resolution images for the client to use on posters and other large format print applications.

The image shown to the left was completed in 5 - 6 hours. Our product visualisation services include modelling, label mapping & rendering.

RevolutionCementMixer

Proen worked as an integral part of the Australian design team that developed this revolutionary product over a period of several years.

We provided a range of services including CAD modelling, engineering design and finite element analysis.

We worked on the composite mixer itself as well as a wide range of tooling and equipment required for manufacture.

Protect-It MAXI Released

Eye-Catcher Innovations recently released Protect-it MAXI for the protection of structural columns.

Proen worked closely with Eye-Catchers to design this innovative product.

Since the product launch in August orders have been flowing in from Germany, USA & Scandinavia.

Trapped! In Paradise - Andi Stevens

We have recently returned from a family holiday to Phuket. We had been looking forward to a 2 week holiday in the sun at the beautiful Centara Villa's resort on Karon beach for ages.

We had a fantastic 2 weeks relaxing, eating out every night and playing in the pool with our 15 month old daughter. The place, as you can see from the photo, is beautiful, the people are very nice and were exceptional with Grace, our daughter. It does not cost much to do whatever you want, the weather is 29 – 36 degrees all the time and food is fantastic. There is some ozone layer left there so you don't get incinerated in seconds, as you seem to here, especially when you are a blood nut like myself. We would recommend it as a great holiday destination.

At the start of the trip home, in the transfer to the airport, we noticed the driver was looking rather worried. Little did we know, as it is a Thai custom not to deliver bad news, the airport had just that second closed due to civil unrest. The people wanted the Prime Minister to stand down and a human barrier was setup to stop anyone getting through to the airport so it made world news and aided their cause. We attempted to enter the airport after news of its re-open. However we ended up doing a lap around the airport and ended up at our original drop off point, a Monastery. After some time, we were told that we would have to go to a hotel in Phuket city and all the trouble would be over with by the following morning when our flights would be reinstated. The next morning came and we got some vague news that the airport would more than likely be closed for the rest of the week. We decided, as there were also rumors of a riot coming near to where we were, that we would return to our hotel on the other side of the island where it was safe and try to find a way home and sort everything out for later in the week. After several days of hassle and sitting on hold with 15000 other stranded holiday makers, we managed to get flight and transfer confirmation. The civil unrest was a little worrying at times but the people were very nice and calm. I would definitely go there again on holiday.

The upside was that we were stuck in Paradise for another 5 days, so all up nearly 3 weeks and although I am a fair skinned red head, even I managed to get a tan!
